A Tribute to

Chrontor Variable is a futuristic grid-based modular typeface inspired by Wim Crouwel's New Alphabet from 1967. All glyphs are built purely with geometric straight lines. All diagonal strokes share a unified 45-degree angle, bringing strong orderliness and minimalist constructive feeling. Its aesthetic is sterile, avant-garde and distinctly sci-fi-flavoured.

The name Chrontor originates from Chronos, god of time, meaning "the master of time".

Latin and Hanzi Pairing

Unique .notdef glyph design

The .notdef placeholder glyph, also known in the industry as "tofu box", will be displayed when a character not present in the font is called. Common default shapes are empty boxes, question marks or crosses.

I specifically designed a Hanzi “無”(none), paired with Latin glyphs, to serve as this placeholder.

THE MATRIX

Background

In the future, a brutal war breaks out between humans and artificial-intelligence machines. Humans block out the Sun to cut off the machines' solar power supply. In response, machines capture human beings and keep them alive in nutrient-filled pods, harvesting their bio-electric energy for power.

The Matrix is a simulated virtual world created by the machines, modelled on human society in 1999. It traps human minds so people believe they are living real lives. A small number of awakened humans escape to Zion, humanity's last underground city. They pilot hovercrafts to hack into the Matrix and rescue more imprisoned humans.
